

NEWS SUMMARY.

City Affairs.
—Yesterday morning Detectives Cobb, Miller, and Fletcher recovered jewelry, wearing apparel, etc., valued at $600, which were stolen from the house of Mrs. Sophia Nelson, No. 1224 Master street, on the 17th of May last. The property was found stowed away in a house in the lower part of the city. The thief is now in prison in Trenton, N. J., having been arrested on another charge.

—Revenue Detective Brooks and others have seized the contents of the rectifying house of Edward Armstrong, at Twelfth and South streets, including some twenty-eight barrels of whisky. The allegation upon which the seizure is based is the receipt and rectification of contraband spirits, and not making in his books the entries required by law.

—The following cases were admitted to the Pennsylvania Hospital yesterday:—Frank Harris, aged 23 years, residing in Camden, leg fractured by a car on the Camden and Amboy Railroad; Fred. W. Klepper, aged 30, residing at No. 824 Orchard street, two toes cut off with an axe while working on a raft at Laurel street wharf; Mary G. Higgins, aged 9 years, residing at No. 618 Lombard street, arm fractured by a fall from the second story window of her residence; George W. Huston, aged 15 years, residing at Front and Christian streets, attacked with convulsions, but afterwards recovered.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.

A shocking tragedy occurred at half-past 9 o'clock last evening at the residence of Mr. Howard A. Holloway, No. 1308 South Ninth street, below Wharton. Amelia McLaughlin, aged about twenty-six years, employed as a domestic in the family, was shot in the breast and instantly killed by a young man named William Stratton, a gas-fitter, who resided at No. 612 Federal street. It seems that Stratton, who occasionally got drunk, was in the habit of visiting Amelia at the residence of Mr. Holloway for several months, but his conduct was of such a character that he was forbidden coming to the house. On a recent occasion he struck Amelia and blackened both her eyes.

Last evening he went to the house, and ascended to the second story, and there had an interview with Amelia. Mr. Holloway was seated at or standing near the front door. Amelia came down stairs and requested him to "let Stratton go away in peace," and then returned up stairs where he was. Presently the reports of a pistol were heard. Lieutenant Smith, of the Seventh district, was promptly at the scene, and upon entering the second story front room he discovered Stratton grasping for breath, lying on the floor by the front of a lounge, a seven-shooter near his right hand. Amelia, who had evidently fallen from the lounge upon the end of which she had been sitting, was in a half reclining position in the corner of the room; the bosom of her outside dress was on fire.

Lieutenant Smith immediately drew her out from the corner and extinguished the fire. She was dead. Dr. Edward Guth was sent for, but when he arrived the man was dead. Amelia had been out in the afternoon, but whether in Stratton's company could not be definitely stated by any person present. The family in which she lived speak in excellent terms as to her character. She had lived there about two years. Lieutenant Smith took possession of the pistol with which this tragedy was committed. It is apparently a new weapon, or one that had been but little used. Upon an examination of the body of Amelia two wounds were discovered in her breast. Stratton shot himself in the right temple.

NEW YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

New York, June 8, 1870.

Miss Montez Again.

The young lady who calls herself the daughter of Lola Montez and the King of Bavaria has been exciting a good deal of attention. For the past two years she has been residing at the Astor House, where it is pleasant to learn she was able to defray expenses that could not have been very small. However, so that she paid her bills and conducted herself with passable propriety, the gentlemen conducting that classic establishment found no fault and expressed themselves satisfied. A day or two ago, however, on a bill being presented, the young lady expressed herself out of funds temporarily and requested a short "wait." Then she is said to have gone up to her apartment and had a fit, in which condition she was discovered by one of the attendants of the hotel. The attendants to which Miss Montez, or Princess Editha, has been subject of late from the Sorosis are quite enough to give her or any ordinary woman an epileptic attack. The young lady originally set out with the design of lecturing on the wrongs of her mother, "the Countess of Landsfeldt." Whether she was right or wrong in thinking that the public would be interested in her view of the matter is a question aside from the subject now in hand. It is certain that the Sorosis and some of the fragments of the Woman's Suffrage Association got around the poor thing, and talked her into attempting a lecture on "Woman's Rights," upon which she was not at all posted. To the improvisation was thus compelled to make she attributes her failure. The sympathies of the reader will be awakened when he learns that the unhappy young woman is subject to epileptic attacks. Upon her being found in one of these seizures in her apartment she was conveyed to police headquarters, that being considered by the Sorosis a sovereign remedy for diseases of that nature when the invalid has no money. Fortunately for the Princess Editha, however, a lady-boarder at the hotel, who took an unusual interest in her, offered to take her back, watch over, and guard her—and, what is more, defray her expenses—until a council of physicians should decide in her case. The affair has created quite a discussion in the newspapers among those who knew the late Countess of Landsfeldt. As bearing upon this subject, the reader may possibly remember a small book published some years ago entitled the "Story of a Penitent," and purporting to give, through the medium of Dr. Hawks, of the Episcopal Church, a "true story" of the last hours of Lola's life. This little book is both effective and affecting in a religious sense. The trouble is that I have heard the truth of the account denied in toto by those who profess to have the fullest knowledge with respect to it. I have been told by one of Lola's most intimate acquaintances that she died in extreme destitution, forsaken by professed friends, and writhing under extreme agony of soul, and that her last words, instead of a humbly-expressed hope of forgiveness, were—well, perhaps it is best not to write what they were, but to throw the veil of charity over every unkind report whose truth we cannot absolutely prove, and to hope, as I do, that her peace was made on the same terms of infinite loving-kindness which other sinners before this have been made welcome and at home on the other side of Jordan.

Horace at the Hoffman.

Bismarck, whose physician ordered him repose, thought of coming to the United States in order to get it. Deluded man! By such an intention he proved very plainly that he little understood the American institution of interviewing. To this torture Mr. Greeley has recently been subjected. From his trip to Nassau he returned quite ill with intermittent fever, and, instead of proceeding to his suburban home to practise what he knew about farming, he took rooms at the Hoffman, arrayed himself in a flannel dressing-gown, and tried hard to exercise patience and stop swearing. The difficulty has been increased and rendered almost insuperable from the fact that the newspaper reporters have flocked around the door of his bedroom, for it is so seldom they have an opportunity of interviewing one of themselves, so to speak, that when the opportunity offers their assiduity knows no bounds. But in Mr. Greeley they find a hard task. He is said to be an extremely difficult case to interview. In the first place, it is next to impossible to gain admission to his presence; and in the second, the only way by which he can be made to say anything worth putting in a paper is to betray him into a momentary fit of spleen. Then, indeed, his shrill soprano whine makes itself heard to some effect, and he exhorts an entire thesaurus of blasphemy of all the choice synonyms by which anathemas can be expressed. As a sick man, he is far from sweet. Were I a nurse he would not be my favorite patient.

Weston's Walk.

In spite of the fact that the hundred miles were so accurately portioned off for Mr. Weston, he has plenty of detractors who are fond of saying that he never walked that distance in twenty-one hours, and that they can prove it. If there is anything that Mr. Weston is to be particularly admired for, it is that he takes pains to keep himself apart from the pedestrian beats who seek notoriety at any cost. As yet he has not taken the trouble to reply to his detractors. Probably he is too busy arranging how to dispose in the most prudent manner of the $1500. His present business of pedestrianism is much more lucrative than his former one. Some years ago, when he used to live at the Savory House, near the Park House, Beckman street, he was a poor book peddler. His daily tramps were then wearisome enough, I ween, and he had no suspicion that he would ever become a champion walkist.

Wasting Public Money.

Mr. Flek gives us music for the million on Sunday evenings at his Grand Opera House, and a number of equally charitable people propose erecting baths for the million at various eligible points throughout this city. Apropos of this intention and of the design of the city authorities to aid them in the matter, a member of the Common Council arose yesterday, and in an elaborate speech announced it as his opinion that for the city to bear any portion of the expense of public baths was a shameful waste of public money. That member is evidently not of the opinion that cleanliness is next to godliness. In spite of his denunciations, the bath-houses are going up, and this summer the as yet unwashed majorities of Gotham expect to become cuticular clean.
